Customer Reviews

This book is not all what you expect. It is a poorly sorted listing of prayers, conjurations, and invocations from numerous disparate sources. In short, it could use a better editor. The prayers follow a rough thematic grouping like "prayers for healing" but then bounce around erratically. There are subject headings as if there was a section planned but then there will be only 1 or 2 prayers under it, almost defeating the purpose for the heading in the first place. Some prayers have a little context given like "say this prayer at night while lighting a candle" or "this prayer is from a Hindu tradition" but many do not. Many prayers are in other languages and do not have a translation so you aren't even sure what your praying. In one instance, the subject heading says to pray these elemental conjurations in Latin only then the first prayer (fire) is in English and very short saying nearly nothing. The following three elemental prayers are in Latin only and are a page long each. It looks like the book was originally going to be larger and someone brutally gutted it right before printing and no one checked to make sure it still made sense. The introduction is simplistic and uninspired reading. The author is obviously a devotee of Samael Aun Weor as he haphazardly quotes Me. Weor repeatedly in the margins but with little rhyme or reason as there is no explanation of Weor's system or how these prayers fit in it whatsoever. There are Aztec prayers, the invocation from the Key of Solomon, Conjurations of Elemental Archangels, Hindu mantras, invocations to Isis and Jupiter, the Lord's Prayer, the Hail Mary, a prayer attributed to St. Francis of Assisi and some technique to gain clairvoyance by staring at yourself in a mirror.
